

Many young adults are struggling to get access to – and afford – health coverage. The health care reform law which passed Congress last month will allow young adults to stay on, or return to, a parent’s insurance plan until age 26, beginning September 23.

Four of the five largest health insurers have offered a coverage extension for young adults to join their parent’s plan before September, providing greater health security to millions of American families.

Aetna and Blue Cross Blue Shield will offer an extension in the next few months just in time for members of the Class of 2010 as they graduate from college and UnitedHealth Group and Humana are offering coverage immediately.

If you have questions or would like to know how this change could help you, please contact your insurer or employer.
